

ON THE BASEBALL FIELD

Boston Wins the First Game of the Temple Cup Series from Baltimore.

HAMILTON SAVED THE GAME

He Made Two Phenomenal Catches in the Eighth Inning Which Stopped Runs—Game Noted for Heavy Batting—Nops's Wildness Proves Fatal.

BOSTON, Oct. 4.—The new champions won the first game for the Temple Cup to-day, defeating the Baltimores in a close contest more through a combination of lucky hits and daring base running, assisted by darkness in the last two innings, than by any great superiority of play. Neither team showed championship form, while the work of the home team was at times very much below the mark. The Baltimores batted Nichols out of the box, and would have given Lewis a similar dose if they could have seen the ball in the last two innings. As it was, the game ended in the gloaming, the umpires keeping the players at it until some time after sundown.

One of the biggest crowds of the year turned out, and with the assistance of the famous "rooters" and two bands the enthusiasm when the home team took the lead in the sixth inning was almost unparalleled on the South End grounds. Only two bases were allowed on hits into the crowd in left field, and this also mitigated against the visitors.

Jennings was easily the star of the game. His timely batting and superb work at short were much better than that of his rival, Long. For the home team, Capt. Duffy led his men in batting and base running, while Hamilton made two phenomenal catches in centre field.

Baltimore started the game like winners, batting Nichols's curves hard, and before the home team realized it four runs had come over the plate. Boston, however, was equal to the occasion, and hit Nops just as hard and scored three runs.

In the second inning Baltimore went out in short order, and Boston could not score. Baltimore scored one run in the third inning through fine batting of Kelley and Reitz. In the Bostons' half of the fourth inning Long bunted well and scored on Bergen's single and an out.

Both teams scored two runs in the fifth inning, the visitors through hits by Jennings, Kelley, Stenzel, Doyle, and Lowe's poor throw, and the home team on two errors and some daring base running. In the sixth inning the visitors started in to clinch the game. McGraw, Jennings, Kelley, and Doyle all hit safely, and but for fine work on Long's part more than three runs would have been scored. The home team, however, were not dismayed, and encouraged by the "rooters," they hit Nops's curves all over the field in their half of the sixth, and scored five runs, taking the lead for the first time in the game.

The visitors forged ahead again in the seventh, Lewis, who had taken Nichols's place, being hit hard. The Bostons had a fine chance to score in their half, but sharp fielding ended their chances. Hamilton saved the game in the eighth inning by two marvelous catches, and the Bostons went in to win. It did not take long for the two necessary runs to come over the plate, and again the home team was ahead. The last inning was begun in the rapidly fading twilight, and while the Baltimores tried hard to see the ball, and did succeed in making a couple of hits, the strain was too much, and after two had struck out Long threw the last man out at first.

ATTACK OF HOMICIDAL MANIA.

A Woman Creates a Scene in a Brooklyn Lodging House and Then Escapes.

Mrs. Rena Stafford, the daughter of the Rev. A. Stewart Walsh of Brooklyn, was seized with homicidal mania early yesterday morning in a lodging house at 120 Gates Avenue, Brooklyn. She had been living there for three months under the name of Pearl Walsh. A few days ago she began to talk queerly, and on Sunday night she asked a Miss Durfee to sleep with her. When Miss Durfee retired Mrs. Stafford was sitting by the window. After a while Miss Durfee was awakened by hearing Mrs. Stafford muttering something about the stars.

Miss Durfee became alarmed and decided to keep awake for the rest of the night. At 3 o'clock in the morning Mrs. Stafford dashed at her and pulled her out of bed, shrieking: "God Almighty, don't let me kill this woman!" Miss Durfee succeeded in getting away and arousing the house. Mrs. Stafford was finally quieted, and an ambulance was summoned from St. John's Hospital. Dr. Graves responded, and took her to the hospital. While preparations were being made for her removal to the asylum at Flatbush she slipped out of the door unobserved and escaped. She is still at large, but the police are looking for her.

She is the wife of Arthur Stafford, son of the ink manufacturer. Her father has retired from the ministry, and is active in politics in Brooklyn. She is about twenty-two years old. Two years ago she separated from her husband, and has since had aspirations toward the stage.

THE EUGENIE'S CREW HERE.

Steamer Wrecked on Great Island, but All on Board Escaped to a Rocky Ledge.

Capt. Hansen, his wife, and part of the crew of the Norwegian steamship Eugenie, which was wrecked Sept. 17 on Great Island, Toad's Cove, Newfoundland, reached Brooklyn yesterday on the steamship Ceylon, from St. John's. With the Captain were the first and third mates, the boatswain, and one seaman. The others of the crew were forwarded to Shields, from which port the Eugenie had sailed in ballast for Louisburg, Cape Breton.

The Captain said that he had lost his bearings in a fog. It was night, and a high sea was running when he struck on a rock. Water came in rapidly through a big hole in the port bow. In less than an hour his vessel had filled and settled, so that her decks were awash and the seas made a breach over her.

By lashing a couple of ladders together all hands were able to reach a ledge of rocks in a place of safety, but not comfort, as with every inrush of the breakers they were deluged. A precipice of 200 feet rose back of them. With the use of the ladder and a rope made of their clothing, however, they finally reached the top. Mrs. Hansen had to be hauled up by the rope.

Great Island is uninhabited, but there were a great many rabbits and birds there, and guano deposits, which emitted a terrible odor. The following day, the seas having moderated, fishermen happened along and took off the island all but the mate and three men, who stayed by hoping that the vessel or part of its fittings might be saved. Enough was got from her to fit up a camp, and a week later a boat was sent for them. The steamer had in the mean time gone to pieces. The Captain said that his wife behaved as well as the men when it looked as though all must perish.

The Eugenie was built at Middlesboro, England, in 1888, and hailed from Bergen, where she was owned by Mohr & Son. She was of 2,364 gross tonnage, 295 feet long, 38 feet beam, and 20 feet depth. She was valued at $125,000.
